Kajal conducted an activity 'identity wheel' to unravel students' perceptions and make them think critically about their perception. Further, they discussed about the Cis-Heterosexual Privileges, reflected upon the rational approach to develop empathy and the significance of intersectionality in the way forward. Lastly, Kajal focused on the youth and the mental health, emphasized on different laws and protections. Around 138 students from BTech II Semester and BDes semester VI attended the workshop.

CCCT event - Reading Circle 3.0

CCCT, JKLU conducted its first session of the "reading Circle 3.0" on February 16, 2023 for the current semester. The participants discussed a short story 'The Yellow Wallpaper'.

<https://www.nlm.nih.gov/exhibition/theliteratureofprescription/exhibitionAssets/digitalDocs/The-Yellow-Wall-Paper.pdf>

'The Yellow Wallpaper', a 1892 short story by Charlotte Perkins Gilman, has the structure and style of a diary. It details the deterioration of a woman's mental health while she is on a "rest cure" on a rented summer country estate with her family. Her obsession with the yellow wallpaper in her bedroom marks her descent into psychosis from her depression throughout the story. Through a series of short instalments, students learnt more about the narrator's situation and her treatment at the hands of her doctor husband and her sister-in-law. The 'Yellow Wallpaper' is so unsettling because it plays with established Gothic horror conventions and then subverts them in order to expose the misguided medical practices used in an attempt to 'treat' or 'cure' women who are suffering from mental or nervous disorders. It has become a popular feminist text about the male mistreatment of women partly because the 'villain', the narrator's husband John, is acting out of a genuine (if hubristic) belief that he knows what's best for her. The whole field of nineteenth-century patriarchal society and the way it treats women thus comes under scrutiny, in a story that is all the more powerful for refusing to preach, even while it lets one such mistreated woman speak for herself. The participants shared their perspectives and experiences on the same issue. There were discussions around the situation of women in the current times and how they are treated by the society. With this discussion, students tried to be conscious of such occurrences in their surroundings and vicinity. They also talked about the importance of empathy in such situations. There were around 25 student participants for the discussion.

Reading Circle 3.0 – CCCT Event

CCCT conducted its "reading Circle 3.0" on March 3, 2023. The participants discussed a short story 'A Worn Path'.

<https://www.theatlantic.com/magazine/archive/1941/02/a-worn-path/376236/>

In "A Worn Path," Eudora Welty shows that determination and will enable people to survive in life no matter how difficult the struggle is. A person would endure and overcome the forces of nature and society for those they love. The story revolves around themes like, Love, Race and Class, Perseverance and Power. About 60 students involved in the discussion shared their opinions on the story and its major themes. They also undertook an assignment based on the story wherein they were asked to think of something in their life that they struggle through in order to achieve something as there are many reasons someone would put themselves through a hardship, such as Phoenix Jackson did in "A Worn Path." Students wrote an essay describing their hardships and the reasons they endure it.

Each startup shared their startup journey which motivated them to come up with this product. In addition to the exhibition, there was also an evaluation by a panel of judges. The jury panel consisted of 4 judges who had extensive experience in entrepreneurship and business. The judges evaluated the startups based on various criteria such as innovation, market potential, and feasibility. The event was organized by the Faculty Coordinator Dr. Sheetal Mundra, President Risha Sharma & Vice President Aditya Vyas of the CORPOVA, Business and Finance Club. The club had made all the necessary arrangements to ensure that the event ran smoothly, and they had put in a lot of effort to make the event a success. Further more, the Startup Exhibition provided an opportunity for the participating startups to interact with potential customers. Many of the startups were able to connect with interested customers and form valuable partnerships. Additionally, the event allowed the startups to receive feedback from the attendees and the judges, which they could use to refine their products and services and improve their overall business strategies. Overall, the Startup Exhibition was a huge success. The winner teams are Up Food & Eco Frag and runner up teams are Maali Project and Gulbaari.

Discussion Series: The Think Tank

The Muse Ink Literary Club and Centre for Communication and Critical Thinking, at JK Lakshmipat University initiated a new discussion series "The Think Tank," which aims to bring together students and faculty members to engage in friendly and thought-provoking discussions on various topics. The discussion was conducted on the issue titled "AI and Unemployment" on March 16, 2023, Technology Block 006. The students explored the impact of Artificial Intelligence (AI) on employment and the workforce. They discussed and examined how the growing technology is changing the nature of the work. The discussion was held in the presence of JKLU Vice-Chancellor, Prof Dheeraj Sanghi. He reflected his views on the topic and further directed productive and sustainable discussion. It helped the students explore the core domain of AI and enhance their critical thinking skills. More than 50 students from B.Tech participated in the discussion.

PANORAMA OF EVENTS

CRY Workshop on 'Digital Media and the Safety of Children and Adolescents'

The Centre for Communication and Critical Thinking at JK Lakshmipat University, in collaboration with CRY – Child Rights and You, organised a workshop on 'Digital Media and the Safety of Children and Adolescents', on Saturday, March 18, 2023. The objective behind the day-long workshop was to initiate the discussion on this very relevant and sensitive issue among the students who would be responsible for shaping the future in different capacities. The speakers at the workshop were Dr. Debarati Dhar, Manager (Media Advocacy), CRY, and Ms. Ragini Pant, Senior Manager (Research), CRY, and who leveraged their vast experience and knowledge of the domain to help the attending students understand and engage with important questions and ideas related to online safety. Dr. Debarati Dhar started the discussion by touching on a broad selection of related topics: constructs of digital safety, the notion of online risk and trust, the idea of the term "child labour" often being related to the informal sector alone, traffickers luring children through online platforms, and cyber-bullying, among others. She pointed out complexities of the online space: for instance, how survivors of abuse in the offline space sometimes become perpetrators in the online space. She encouraged the participants to share their own experiences, or those that they knew of from within their circles, to make the session more participatory and authentic. Following on from the given examples, she asked them to consider why we often feel apprehensive talking about such incidents with parents, and highlighted the need for sensitivity when it came to listening to those who might have gone through such experiences. In the next session, the speaker shared the empirical findings of a recently concluded research study by CRY and Chanakya National Law University, Patna, titled "POCSO and Beyond: Understanding Online Safety during COVID". The need for the study was highlighted: although laws and acts like CSEA and POCSO exist on paper, their implementation needs to be studied and examined in detail. Often, even media and organisations that work with children and their parents do not have the right data. There is a lack of credible information, especially from studies conducted in the Indian context. In this session, following a discussion on the stakeholders, the parameters and the design of the study, key findings were shared, including the fact that child trafficking actually increased during the COVID-19 pandemic, through the use of online spaces. It was highlighted that, overall, the study actually resulted in more questions being raised about the safety of children online. To allow for greater engagement with the ideas discussed, the participants were asked to work in groups of around 5-6 people and prepare a visual representation/poster of their understanding of how child sexual abuse operates, especially online. The session was attended by around 125 first-year students from the B.Tech. programme, who participated enthusiastically in the discussion and asked pertinent questions.
