Leadership Workshop Series on Gender and Masculinities in Relationship

JKLU's Center for Communication and Critical Thinking, in collaboration with The YP Foundation, organised the first session of Leadership Workshop series on 'Gender and Masculinities in Relationship' on March 11, 2022. Sagar and Siddhant were the two facilitators from the YP foundation who conducted the workshop. It was intended for the Students' Council and Club presidents to engage them with holistic leadership development. The workshop was initiated with a warm-up activity and students were instructed to put down their rules throughout the session. Further, based on the pre-defined rules of the students, facilitators initiated their workshop underlining the important aspects of the masculinities and the role of consent within the relationship. They screened stories to clarify the concept and discussed its day-to-day applications. Student participants actively engaged in the conversation and expressed their understanding of the relationship and consent. The facilitators conducted the exercise that highlighted the pre-conceived notions of Masculinity and Femininity. They also utilized various exercises to debunk society's stereotypical preconceived notions and how it is dangerous to remain within those rigidly defined spectrums of femininity and masculinity. They further initiated the debate of identity beyond the defined binary of society. The discussion on LGBTQIA identity and its varied spectrum opened up the space for discussion among the students. They have also highlighted different forms of violence within relationships through the context of masculinity. The students actively engaged in discussing gender identity and reflected a broad-minded approach by questioning the existing patriarchy, identity imposition, form of violence, and discrimination among identities. There were 23 Student Council and Club president members and CCCT faculty members. The workshop was conducted offline, along with an interactive outdoor activity.

Holika Dahan Celebrations

Holi is a festival that takes place every spring. It welcomes the spring season and celebrates the end of winter. Holi falls on Purnima, or the day of the full moon. It's a two-day holiday; the day of the March full moon is Holika Dahan. That's when a bonfire is lit for a puja. The bonfire is cleansing and meant to burn away all the bad and evil. The next day, directly after the full moon, is all about the festival of colors. The Holika Dahan started at time 21:30 PM to 22:00 PM on the ground next to 1 BHK flat located inside JKLU Campus. The bonfire was ignited by Professor Sanghi and Mrs. Sanghi. When the holika was burning, harbhara was being suspended over it and circulated amongst the participants. On the venue, 37 students were present alongside 18 teaching and non-teaching staff. The next day, from morning 09:00 AM to afternoon 13:00 PM we celebrated the rangwali holi. During this time, we used the ground next to 2 BHK to smear colors on each other to celebrate the festival. During the colour smearing, we also organized musical DJ session where we danced alongside playing with colour.
